

"In Memoriam" Incongruity.

Sports of all kinds and other gala features that characterized the observance of Decoration Day in and around this city yesterday, contributed to make it an occasion of rejoicing rather than of regretful remembrance. The usual parades and appropriate ceremonies of the Grand Army marked the significance of the day, and for the thousands who greeted it as a timely holiday for outdoor sports there was an excellent card of attractions from which to choose. Those whose holiday's tastes were for thoroughbreds and the turf found sport at Gravesend, where the Brooklyn Derby and the Myrtle Stakes were the special features. The followers of trotting had the choice of Waverly Park, Mountain View Park, the Parkway Driving Club, and Cornwall, where speedy stoppers showed their paces and won purses. A dozen or more yacht clubs within easy reach of New York gave their openings yesterday, and sails were stretched for trial spins; to say nothing of the half dozen regattas ranging from that of the American Yacht Club on the lake in Prospect Park, to the Harlem Yacht Club's free for all in classes between the 17-foot open cuts up to the 60-foot schooners. Oarsmen divided their attention between the banks of the Harlem and Passaic rivers, where well-trained crews rowed good races. The national game held its own, and New York and Brooklyn crossed bats with Chicago and Cleveland; and there were lesser games on every available field. Meadowbrook's annual polo tournament, golf, cricket, and tennis matches, and the field events of several athletic clubs, went to fill up the card and furnish good amusement. At all of these different field meets the popularity of the wheel, and with it the bloomer, was demonstrated. Wheelmen and wheelwomen were astir in all parts of New York and Brooklyn early in the day, and the objective point of many of the pedallers was the Millburn road, where nearly 20,000 cyclists were scattered along the course of the great Irvington-Millburn road race. It was a great day for the sports and for the wheel and the bloomer.
